Extra roads add to city's woes

JIM DEWALD AND BEV SANDALACK FOR THE CALGARY HERALD

ealing with huge growth is a big challenge.

The problems of growth manifest in two highly visible ways - traffic problems and homelessness.

Addressing one of these problems only creates new problems. Addressing the other actually creates value for taxpayers. The natural response to traffic congestion is to build more roads.

However, as described in this excerpt from Suburban Nation by Andres Duany, Elizabeth Plater-Zyberk and Jeff Speck, expanding roads is not the answer:

"There is no shortage of hard data. A recent University of California at Berkeley study covering 30 California counties between 1973 and 1990 found that, for every 10 per cent increase in roadway capacity, traffic increased nine per cent within four year's time.

"For anecdotal evidence, one need only look at commuting patterns in those cities with expensive new highway systems: USA Today published the following report on Atlanta: 'For years, Atlanta tried to ward off traffic problems by building more highways per capita than any other urban area except Kansas City

Calgary Herald Archive Traffic crawls through a construction zone.

... As a result of the area's sprawl, Atlantans now drive an average of 35 miles a day, more than residents of any other city.'

"This phenomenon, which is now wellknown to those members of the transportation industry who wish to acknowledge it, has come to be called induced traffic.'

Induced traffic is expensive and counterproductive.

According to the City of Calgary website, Calgary is about halfway through a $2.4 billion transportation capital works program. Induced traffic suggests that this will only make the problem worse.

Further, the operating and maintenance costs on these infrastructure improvements will add 10 to 15 per cent to the city's operating budget, or $240 to $360 million each year.

Applying a two per cent inflationary factor, in 15 years, this $2.4 billion grows to as much as an $8.8 billion cost, footed by us, the taxpayers. Ouch.

What are the options? Consider this additional quote from Suburban Nation:

"The phenomenon of induced traffic works in reverse as well. When New York's West Side Highway collapsed in 1973, a NYDOT study showed that 93 per cent of the car trips lost did not reappear elsewhere; people simply stopped driving.

"A similar result accompanied the destruction of San Francisco's Embarcadero Freeway in the 1989 earthquake. Citizens voted to remove the freeway entirely despite the apocalyptic warnings of traffic engineers.

"Surprisingly, a recent British study found that downtown road removals tend to boost local economies, while new roads lead to higher urban unemployment. So much for road-building as a way to spur the economy."

Addressing the other visible problem of homelessness, shockingly more homeless

First Calgary

City:

Bigger where it counts. Looking after you Visit 1stcalgary.com for all your banking needs.

people in today's booming Jim Dewald economy are people with jobs, and families, who simply can't find affordable housing.

So, here's an idea — what if we allocated a small fraction of the transportation capital budget to increase the supply of affordable rental housing?

We won't take away all of the precious transportation budget, just a bit.

For instance, if we used only 15 per cent of the transportation budget, we could build 2,500 new apartments.

This would eliminate completely the city's affordable housing wait list in one shot.

But here is the real bonus. Apartments have resale value. In fact they appreciate in value.

So, a $360-million investment that solves our housing problem would grow and grow in value, all the while earning hundreds of millions in investment income for the citizens of Calgary.

If we apply the average annual housing price increase of the past 15 years to the next 15 years, this investment grows to a taxpayer value of over $1 billion.

It's a true win-win where housing problems are solved and taxpayers gain through a sound investment in their community.

We need to invest in our community in ways that pay back.
